HTC announces its first smartphone featuring Beats audio technology-- the Rezound, previously known as the Vigor.

It has a 4.3" 1280 x 720 resolution display and uses Android 2.3 (Gingerbread), with a dual-core 1.5GHz processor, 1GB RAM, 16GB internal storage (expandable to a further 16GB via microSD card), wifi and Bluetooh 3.0.

The only feature making Rezound stand out from all other Android handsets the Beats technology-- which users can enjoy using the pair of headphones (complete with built-in microphone and on-cable remote) HTC includes in the package.

Is this the real reason why HTC paid $300M for 51% of the Dr. Dre owned company back in August?
