

As Nokia steps away from Intel's MeeGo project, other handset makers are set to fill in its shoes-- including LG.

Reuters reports LG's joining a working group including the likes of ZTE and China Mobile. Its task? Developing a handset version of the OS.

Nokia was supposed to roll out MeeGo-based devices by this year, but is currently concentrating on Windows Phone instead, following its partnership with MS.

Will MeeGo have any chance in an already overcrowded smartphone market? One will have to wait later this year, when actual MeeGo devices-- possibly from LG-- should hit the market.

Go MeeGo Sees Interests from Others After Nokia Shift