Written by Marco Attard 26. August 2011

As HP drops Palm's webOS (alongside its Personal Systems Group) in favour of courting enterprise clients, Microsoft issues a call for webOS developers asking they switch to Windows Phone 7.

To Any Published WebOS Devs: We'll give you what you need to be successful on #WindowsPhone, incl.free phones, dev tools, and training, etc.

2 hours ago via web

The call comes from Brandon Watson, tweeting Microsoft will give published webOS devs "what you [webOS devs] need to be successful on #WindowsPhone, incl.free phones, dev tools, and training, etc."

Watson says he has over 1000 expressions of interest from disgruntled ex-webOS developers.

Microsoft needs all the app-appeal it can get for Windows Phone 7, after all-- even if the Windows Phone 7 Marketplace already has around 30000 apps.

Go Brandon Watson's Developer Call on Twitter

Go Brandon Watson's Second Twitter Call

HP's Loss, Microsoft's Gain

Written by Marco Attard 26. August 2011

Go Windows Phone 7 Marketplace Reaches Nearly 30000 Apps (Windows Phone Developer Blog)