

Microsoft Out of Nokia's Tablet Game?

Written by Marco Attard
25. March 2011

Nokia's plans to enter the tablet market may exclude (or not) its recent American smartphone partner, Reuters reports.

The news agency's source says Nokia is considering its tablet options-- which include MeeGo, the Nokia-Intel OS project.

Even if Apple still dominates a crowded tablet market (while an increasingly crowded competition squabbles for the remaining scraps) Nokia still wants a slice of the pie-- but appears to be taking its time in order to "get its first tablet right".

Another question still remains-- did Intel drop the MeeGo ball? As Nokia pairs up with Microsoft for its post-Symbian smartphone plans, Intel is said to be looking for new partners in its aims for the mobile market.

Meanwhile Windows is still pushing Windows as a tablet platform, and should be launching a Windows 8 tablet by 2012.

Go Nokia's Tablet Path May Exclude Microsoft \(Reuters\)

Microsoft Out of Nokia's Tablet Game?

Written by Marco Attard
25. March 2011
