A video teaser reveals what Asus has in store for IFA 2014-- the ZenWatch, an Android-Wear powered smartwatch promising to be the best-looking wearable yet.

The video shows very little of the device, other than it featuring a a curved design and what looks like brushed-metal construction.

The company tells Taiwan's Central News Agency the ZenWatch can either be paired with Android devices or used as a standalone device, comes in one size and will include English voice recognition functionality.

It also mentions the price-- under $199, making it less expensive than the Samsung and LG competition.

More ZenWatch details will be available following IFA 2014.
